trip. The moon was shining on her second trip.

She did not refer to any automobile turning in to De Russey Lane, and backing out by the light of which she saw figures. She did not mention Erling. Her lost moccasin had not been found, and was not found during the time of the 1922 investigation. The remaining moccasin was old and badly worn, and David thinks that he would recognize it. In her first version of her story, she said that she heard a woman say "Oh Henry", at the time the shots were fired. Later she withdrew this, and said that she had not heard it. She did not say that she heard the words: "Explain those letters." She did not say that she was armed. She said that she followed to discover the wagon in order who/was the driver of it, so that if he had been stealing her corn, she could make a complaint against him. The mule was not tied to the sapling at the time of this demonstration of her trip.

She was brought to the Prosecutor's Office by David for the purpose of identifying Mrs. Hall. She did not go there to make a complaint about stolen corn, ^{as} she testified. It was suggested to her by Prosecutor Stricker that if reporters asked her what her business was, to say that she was complaining about stolen corn. She did not identify Mrs. Hall. She said that Mrs. Hall looked like the woman that she saw. Willie Stevens was also present, and she did not identify him.
